Evangelists

Lesson for January 12, 1964

The Bible studies selected for us this quarter are focused on persons, characters, rather than events and stories. The Bible seldom uses adjectives. We seldom or never hear, from the pages of the Bible, or a man who was mean, charming, resourceful, lazy, cowardly, courageous . . . not in so many words, at all events. We hear about people of those and many other kinds; but the Bible lets us see what a man is like (just as it lets us see what God is like) not by adjectives but by verbs — not so much by saying what he is as saying what he did.

Two in the Outer Circle

Everybody has heard of the inner circle of Jesus' friends, those closest to him, who shared his most sublime and most agonizing experiences. Peter, James and John are as familiar as they are important. But most Christians would be hard put to it to name the other nine of the original disciples who were later to be called Apostles.

Two of these meet us in the first chapter of John: Philip and Nathaniel. Maybe Nathaniel was the same as Bartholomew; but if their guess is true, still we hear nothing of either Nathaniel or Philip after that Pentecost time. We hear of other Philips, but none of the Apostles by that name. All that is known of Nathaniel is in this fragment of the Gospel by John. We do know a little more about Philip, but it adds up only to the fact that the man was a little stupid.

However, the point here is that Jesus needed, invited, made friends with and made use of ordinary men.

These two men, Philip and Nathaniel, are sometimes called "evangelists." In 20th century America, with the kind of church organizations we have now, it sounds a little odd to call these men evangelists. They were not Billy Grahams. They had no organization of their own; we never hear of either of them preaching a sermon; they had no choir to accompany them; they had no publicity at all. They never issued an "altar call;" they were not known for the large number of their converts. Then why called evangelists? Because that word evangelism just means spreading the good news, and these two men did that in the simplest way possible. The good news was about Jesus. These men were not theologians, they might have made a low grade in a seminary class; but they could do this much — they would tell others about Jesus.

Laymen

In an age of specialization, the present-day church follows the usual pattern and thinks of the minister (pastor, pastor, rector, whatever they call him) as the only person in the outfit "licensed to preach." That was not the way in the New Testament. Undoubtedly in our churches today we need organization and specialization; but the point here is that nonministers, laymen, have just as much right — and just as much duty — to tell others about Jesus, as any minister has. There is a seminary which has a rule forbidding students to preach during their first year. But not so many years ago two young men who didn't know this rule during the summer before they enrolled as students in the seminary, brought fifty-eight persons to Christ.

Is There a Secret?

What did those boys have? What does any successful evangelist have, in or out of the pulpit? Is it some mysterious gift? No, what Philip and Nathaniel had we can all have — if in our hearts we desire it so. We note that these two men were open-minded. They believed the good news with minds free from prejudice, or at least willing to be convinced. Then they had the open mouth (in a good sense)— that is, they did not keep quiet about the Master. (What a contrast to most of us!) And they were men of the open hand. It is not just loyalty to Jesus that makes the evangelist, it is friendliness with other persons. Suppose these two men had had no friends with whom to share the News?

Pastor Speaks

Pushing Ourselves

In conversation with a friend the observation was made that a certain autobiography was published because the author played up the sensual, tragic, and the ruthless life he had lived. The publishing house published the book because it would sell if these things are advertised. My friend had just had a wonderful manuscript rejected on the grounds that it was too good, colorless and clean. The publisher admitted that the style was good, the book well written, but it would not sell.

This reminds me of a certain lawyer who was in retirement decided to run a series of good things that happened, on a Television series. His philosophy was that advertized goodness is just as contagious as badness. The irony of this is that the series did not last very long.

Just how much should a person push himself? To what extent should one advertize self? All know that the image built up of a person is important in determining the popularity and acceptance by Q. Public! Lord Bacon said to James I, "I know that I am censured of some conceit of my ability or worth but I pray your majesty impute it to my desire."

Is a man justified to advertize himself? How far can a person go without public disapproval of himself as a person? There are two teaching on Jesus on this idea. One says, we are his witnesses." Surely we must advertize if we are to be good bearers of the witness of Christ in our lives. The last thing our Lord said to his disciples before his ascension, "go ye therefore and make disciples of all nations" (Acts 1:8)

Then he said to some of those same disciples earlier in his ministry, "he that exalteth himself shall be abased." How can these two be reconciled? The answer lies in the purpose of advertizing self or whatever product we offer to people.

All of us know that there must be some selling of self if we are to sell our product. The car salesman is just as important as the car to be sold. We deal with personalities in all areas of life; therefore we cannot completely disassociate people from things. But a danger lies here. People are gullible and any person who builds his life or witness upon other people's weaknesses is quite a straight shooter. Yet many papers and magazines almost assert that we be Charlatans if our work is to be acceptable. Gullability seems to be the avenue of success as measured by the average mores of today. We want everything played up, even our religion. And far too many are falling into this pattern. All like to be recognized and praised, No one of us is without this trait. The point is how far shall we go in selling ourselves to get our fellowman to buy our gospel.

The minister asserts his own right to use every medium within reason to overcome by self his message across. To pattern the spiritual development of man in the mould of the world may get the message over, but does it help man to be a good man. There is far too much religion without any regard to morality and goodness! I still hear the words of Billy Graham on a recent appearance of Jack Paar's program. "Jack you have to be good to do good." And the only way to be good is through the Lord Jesus Christ." Mr. Graham gave this as a witness to the nation. Perhaps he was conscious of the 20 million people listening, and I am sure he is concerned about keeping his image acceptible, but it seems that his product — Christ is the answer — was more important to him than he himself.

Perhaps by allowing the Christ of our life to be the center we can keep the right balance in the selling of self and of the witness we sell-even Christ most important that Christ image be kept pure.

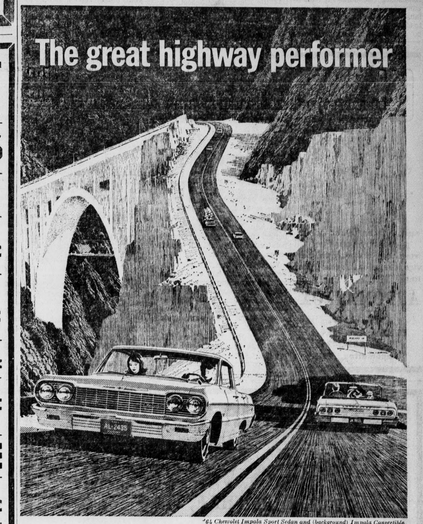
The great highway performer



'64 Chevrolet Impala Sport Sedan and (background) Impala Convertible

'64 Jet-smooth Luxury Chevrolet

What does it take to make a car a great highway performer?

If the car happens to be a '64 Chevrolet, one thing only. A highway.

You'll find everything else already neatly packaged for you—on the car exactly as you pick it off the showroom floor.

There's a choice of seven engines—all the way up to a twin-carb high-compression 425-hp V8*—and four transmissions, including a finely honed 4-speed stick shift.†

And underlying it all—a bump-skimming Jet-smooth ride that helps keep the performance great even when the highways aren't so great.

What about special performance equipment? Professional driving skills? Forget them.

Nobody has to doctor or coax or soup up these Chevrolets to get the best out of them.

And that's really the test of a great highway performer: Just about anyone can get a kick out of driving one, just about anywhere, just as it comes out of the showroom.

Next time you're out your dealer's way, allow a few extra minutes to sample one of these highway performers on your own. A few are really all you'll need. That's enough time to do a lot of driving in a Chevrolet. *Optional at extra cost
